

IMPROV WORKSHOPS WITH KLAUS PETER SCHREINER INTERACTION, INSPIRATION, EMOTION...

Workshop for teachers (6 to 12 hours)

Improvisation And Creativity In The Classroom

This workshop makes the participants familiar with basic improvisation techniques. They can be used in the role as a teacher as well as for extracurricular activities with students. How can we use body language to demand respect (“status”)? How can we deal creatively with unexpected situations? How can we foster cooperative communication? What can being attentive and being in the moment contribute to healthy relations? What improv games and formats can we use to entertain a school audience?

The techniques introduced in this workshop are mainly used in improvisation theatre but they are essential tools for anyone working with people. They foster teamwork and make us aware of non-verbal communication and body language. All the games and techniques can be used in teaching students to improvise little scenes (by the way, Klaus will also be happy to work with a group of interested students, of course). They will be practised in a highly motivational and fun atmosphere encouraging teachers to explore their storytelling talents and their interpersonal skills.

Klaus has for many years been teaching improv in Germany, Austria and more recently in Britain. He has studied under international masters like Keith Johnstone, with whom he has collaborated as a workshop interpreter in Germany. Klaus is fascinated by the magic of human interaction both on and off the stage and the process of creating stories, both of which he continues to explore in his workshops emphasising fun, creativity and encouragement.
